however, many reductions of organic compounds such as carbonyl and carboxyl compounds use aluminum and boron hydride reagent they are manageable in the laboratory, they are commercially available, and they can be modified to fine-tune their reactivity to various degrees for specific uses. two of the most widely used hydride reagents in organic from organic chemistry - (ucr) department of chemistry - organic redox reactions. electron transfer is usually difficult to see in the organic reactant(s) and product(s) in an organic redox reaction. for example the conversion of a 2° alcohol to a ketone (figure 17.003) is oxidation, but it is not obvious that electron transfer has occurred by looking at the alcohol and ketone structures. figure 17.003
